WASHINGTON HIGH SCHOOL CADETS

FOREWORD

THIS edition of The Adjutant—the twenty-second—records the past history and the present accomplishments of the Cadet Corps. It is significant that amid the vast growth and change in the Washington high schools, this organization has remained for over a half-century an integral and vital force. Through living action it has demonstrated to succeeding generations of high school youth the value and the satisfaction that come from active participation in an organization rich in traditions of honor and individual responsibility, and in the esprit de corps by which the individual subordinates himself to that discipline which is necessary for the good of the whole.

CELIA OPPENHEIMER,

MR. NORMAN J. NELSON

An Interview by LT. COL. JACK F. BENNETT, H. S. C.

THE Washington High School Cadet Corps has a true friend in Mr. Norman J. Nelson, the principal of Woodrow Wilson High School, whose association with Washington schools and Cadet work has extended over nineteen years. It was in 1916 that this young westerner, who was to accomplish so much in the field of education for his adopted city, came to the Capital to work with the Federal government. He left his home in North Dakota, where the majority of his youth had been spent and where already he had completed two years of college. This education he continued in Washington by attending school at night, and soon the George Washington University conferred upon him a Bachelor of Arts degree.

In 1918 Mr. Nelson resigned from the Federal government to enlist in the armed forces of the nation. Almost immediately he was transferred to London, remaining there for a year and a half. Upon his return to America he again entered the employ of the government and for three years he served in an executive capacity.

A deep ambition to enter the field of academic instruction was gratified in 1922, for in that year Mr. Nelson withdrew permanently from the government and joined the teaching faculty of Central High School. A few years later he was advanced to the office of assistant principal. Here it was that his active interest in and deep respect for the Washington High School Cadet Corps originated. Central at that time, with its thirty-two hundred students, often had as many as ten companies, and the affairs of this great organization were largely in the hands of a military committee composed of eight teachers. Mr. Nelson was made a member of this committee. Consequently, each spring he would with the other members judge all prospective commissioned officers in an oral examination and in an actual exhibition of commanding a squad. Later, while he was assistant principal, all cases of breach of discipline were brought before him.

Leaving Central in 1928, Mr. Nelson studied for a year at Harvard University and received a Master's degree in English. The next year, however, he re-entered the District school system as assistant principal at Western High School. Between school terms in 1930 he visited England again on a travelling scholarship, making a thorough study of the secondary schools of that nation.

At its founding in 1935, Mr. Nelson became principal of Woodrow Wilson High School, which under his good-natured, intelligent and inspiring leadership has in but a few years attained an eminent rank among the secondary schools of America.

Mr. Nelson entertains high regard for the worth of the High School Cadet Corps training. With pleasure he recalls the benefit it has been to boys whom he has taught and known well. Particularly clear is his memory of the second-place captain whose Cadet training had instilled in him such determination that, when, during his turn on the company competitive field, a sudden cloudburst drenched him and his men, he held his men in place and decided to continue the drill rather than to take the opportunity of returning later. Mr. Nelson considers that the Corps produces two primary benefits. One of these is the training in leadership which by placing unusual responsibility on high school boys heightens their self-reliance and increases their stature —a value which may flow from other extra-curricular activities but from none to so many boys. The other is the stimulation to scholastic achievement resulting from a system of advancement which places so great an emphasis upon curricula achievement.

The High School Cadet Corps is most fortunate and indeed proud to have the wholehearted support of a man who so well as Mr. Norman J. Nelson understands its purposes, problems, and ideals.

EXCERPTS

FROM THE HISTORY OF THE CADET CORPS WASHINGTON PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL

Brought up to date by COLONEL DAVID A. RHODES, H. S. C.

1882—The Washington High School Cadet Corps was organized when two companies of 50 men each were formed at Central High School. Since only fifty Austrian rifles had been issued, the two companies used them alternately.

George Israel, a Central High School teacher, instructed the companies. Later, Captain Burton R. Ross, who became Lieutenant Colonel of the District Militia, was formally appointed the first instructor of the Cadet Corps.

1883—The corps made its first public appearance in the parade of the Grand Army of the Republic.

1885—The cadets marched in the inaugural parade of President Cleveland and were present at the dedication of the Washington Monument.

1888—First Competitive Drill was held. Company A of Central High School won first place.

1890—Four new companies were added to the Cadet Corps with the opening of four new schools in September of this year: Business, now Roosevelt, Eastern, McKinley and Western.

1893—The first Colonel was appointed. This honor was bestowed upon Luther Reichelderfer, now Dr. Reichelderfer, an ex-Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

1895—The Allison Nailor Medal was presented to the High School Cadets by Mr. Allison Nailor. The purpose of the medal is "To stimulate a higher degree of proficiency and skill in Military knowledge. . . ."

1913—Colonel Ross, who had discharged his duties efficiently for twenty years and had won the respect and admiration of everyone associated with the Corps, died.

Major McCathran was appointed to the position vacated by the death of Colonel Ross.

1914—The late Stephen E. Kramer, Assistant Superintendent of the public schools, originated the idea of holding an annual ceremony to present Commissions to the cadet officers. His purpose was to create a feeling of unity among the cadets.

The first presentation was made by Brigadier General E. M. Weaver, U. S. Army. The ceremony has been continued and is now observed at each school every Spring.

1916—Major McCathran was called to the Mexican border for service. For a year the cadets were without an official Military Instructor. Major E. Z. Steever, U. S. Army, then a lieutenant, voluntarily gave the cadets elementary training in military science.

Lieutenant N. B. Briscoe was appointed by the War Department to succeed Major McCathran. When war was declared with Germany Lieutenant Briscoe was assigned to other duties. His assistant, the former Cadet Colonel Wallace M. Yater, was promoted to instructor and Cadet Major Worth Shoults became Assistant Military Instructor.

1917—Cadet Corps was first organized as a brigade under the direction of Lieutenant Briscoe.

The first official program of the Competitive Drill was published. It consisted of only twenty pages and contained the personnel of the brigade and the pictures of the officers. Miss Rebecca E. Shanley, teacher of English, who originated the idea of a cadet year book, founded in 1917 the year book we now know as the Adjutant. Under Miss Shanley's direction the magazine has developed from a program into an official record of the history and regulations of the Cadet Corps.

During the World War the cadets received numerous certificates from the War Department for service rendered in assisting the Registration for the Selective Draft.

Many cadets joined the national forces and participated in actual combat. We are justly proud of the fine precedent set by members of the corps in such a crisis.

1918—Cadet Major Shoults was promoted to the position of Military Instructor.

1919—Lieutenant Richard R. Day, U. S. M. C., was appointed Military Instructor when Major Shoults resigned.

Extended order drill was introduced to make military training more realistic and practicable.

1920—Military Map Problems competitions were introduced to stimulate interest in military tactics.

The membership of the Cadet Corps had increased to a total of 1350 men, who were distributed through 23 companies.

On May 5, the Cadet Corps marched in the National Army Essay contest parade and was complimented by Secretary of War Newton D. Baker upon its fine appearance.

1921—Brigade Rifle Team was organized by Walter R. Stokes, who had been Captain of Company B in 1917.

A medical unit was organized by Dr. Yater, but this unit was discontinued a few years later.

Lieutenant Colonel Wallace M. Craigie became the Professor of Military Science and Tactics. Captain A. C. Strecker and Captain Johnson were appointed his assistants.

On March 4, the entire Cadet Corps acted as guard of Honor for President Harding at his inauguration.

1922—The Third Regiment, consisting of Western, Eastern, and Business High Schools, and the Junior High Schools, was organized.

The annual Non-Commissioned Officers Competition was established to determine the best sergeant in the brigade each year.

The Cadet Band was organized in two divisions.

The black leather Sam Browne belt was adopted.

A summer camp was formed at Camp Simms where boys could further their cadet training.

A cadet court, composed of the highest ranking officers, was introduced to try all infractions of the rules and regulations.

Major B. O. Kennedy and Captain A. J. O'Keefe became assistant instructors.

1923—The Regimental Competition was introduced, and being successful, was continued.

The Brigade was presented with its first Brigade colors.

1925—Major John S. Donovan, U. S. Army, was transferred from the Third to the First Regiment, and Major Raymond G. Payne filled his place at the Third Regiment.

Junior High School Drill was discontinued.

1926—The modern, comfortable lapel-collared uniform was introduced and the high stiff uniform collars were discarded.

Captain David Van Pelt became the military instructor of the Second Regiment.

1928—Captain Van Pelt died after two years of conscientious service.

1929—Selected companies marched in President Hoover's Inaugural Parade.

1931—Colonel Maish became ill and was replaced by Lieutenant Colonel Frank Moorman. Colonel Maish died in the fall of this year after eight years of faithful service with the Cadet Corps.

Captain Robert W. Norton was assigned to duty at Eastern High School, replacing Major Payne, who was transferred to Western.

1932—The Cadet Corps participated in many ceremonies celebrating the George Washington Bicentennial. Among these was the Army Day Parade. Participation in the Army Day Parade is now an annual function of the Corps, and to the many duties of the Brigade Commander has been added that of mounted aid to the marshal of the R. O. T. C. units.

1933—The National Economy Act dealt a severe blow to the cadets when it eliminated the salaries of the Military Instructors. Apparently doomed, the Cadet Corps survived, when Colonel Craigie volunteered to serve as Professor of Military Science and Tactics without remuneration.

Lieutenant Paul Doerr was appointed Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics.

1936—A battalion was organized at the new Woodrow Wilson High School. The battalion formed a part of the Fourth Regiment and was instructed by the late Lieutenant Joseph Murphy.

Assistant Superintendent of Public Schools in Charge of Cadets

A GOOD INSURANCE POLICY

By DR. CHESTER W. HOLMES
Assistant Superintendent of Public Schools

AT FIRST glance the two words "motivation" and "insurance" seem to have little in common; but when we realize that membership in the High School Cadet Corps is just about the best kind of insurance a high school boy can have in these martial days, seeking or maintaining such membership indicates the finest kind of motivation one can hope for.

There can be no doubt of the excellent preliminary training which the cadet corps gives to boys who are approaching the age which our Government is considering best for the creation of a young, strong, alert defense army—yet one which, upon occasion, may be obliged to take the offensive. Any boy who is ambitious and who desires to rise to a position of leadership and responsibility if summoned to become a part of such an army ought to want to get as much foundational training as possible before entering that army.

But such training is not confined in its values to strictly military life and objectives. If ever America needed youth who are self-disciplined, it is now. We need young men and young women who, in their formative years, are willing to undergo the rigors of hard work and study in order that they may learn thoroughly the things they will need to know to forge ahead in the workaday world later. That involves some subordination of self for the moment for the greater goal to be achieved later. The Cadet Corps trains boys to "stand on their own two feet," to meet problems squarely, to assume responsibilities, and to learn by their mistakes as well as by their successes. They learn to give and take in a friendly way. They learn to carry themselves with confidence and assurance. The High School Cadets, as a group, do more for the general good of our high schools—and thereby for themselves—than any other single group of students. The outstanding benefits which accrue to boys who become cadets recall a four-line word of caution once meted out by a philosopher; though I cannot recall it word for word, it goes somewhat like this:

A man who knows not and knows not that he knows not is a fool—shun him!
A man who knows not and knows that he knows not is a learner—help him!
A man who knows and knows not that he knows is a dullard—arouse him!
A man who knows and knows that he knows is a wise man—cultivate him!

Let us hope that an even larger number of boys next year will appreciate the values of character training that are inherent in the Cadet Corps and decide to take advantage of the training it offers to prepare themselves better to meet the hard realities of life. Every cadet this year should take it upon himself to get a classmate not now in the corps to join next year. The year 1940-1941 has been a fine year for the corps, but let us make 1941-1942 the greatest year in the history of the corps—the greatest in enrollment and in accomplishment.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL WALLACE M. CRAIGIE, U. S. ARMY, RETIRED

Professor of Military Science and Tactics

AN INTERVIEW

LIEUT. COLONEL WALLACE M. CRAIGIE

U. S. ARMY, RETIRED, PROFESSOR OF MILITARY SCIENCE & TACTICS

By CADET COLONEL DAVID A. RHODES, Brigade Commander, H. S. C.

SINCE there is so much interest in the increase of our military forces in the United States during 1940 and 1941, I was eager to find out just exactly what a cadet's chances were when he reached the proper age and decided to embark on a military career. Lieutenant Colonel Wallace M. Craigie, U. S. Army, Retired, was the man best qualified to satisfy my queries.

Lieut. Colonel Craigie has seen active army life both in frozen Alaska and in the dense, hot jungles of the Philippines. One of the Army's men who was constantly on the jump, he has a highly commendable record of service earned in many parts of the world. Lieut. Colonel Craigie has faithfully served as Professor of Military Science and Tactics in the Washington High School Cadet Corps since 1921.

After a little consideration the Colonel spoke. "I am confident," he said, "that the training received by a member of the High School Cadet Corps will stand him in good stead when he is eligible for the draft or elects to enlist in any of the U. S. services. Three years of training in the Cadet Corps is of incalculable benefit, teaching as it does many most desirable characteristics: leadership, proper obedience to constituted authority, ability to handle units of which he may be in command, and citizenship, with its obligations as well as its privileges. In addition to the foregoing, from a military standpoint a cadet, particularly if he has reached commissioned or non-commissioned grades, will be in line for assignment in charge of certain military units."

At this point I questioned him concerning this military viewpoint in respect to a man entering the service with previous training. The Colonel answered, "When a man joins a branch of the service and 'Falls in' for his first formation, the officer or non-com in charge of training units will undoubtedly say to the new men, 'All men who have had previous military training step two paces to the front!'

"Men with previous cadet training," the Colonel continued, "are much more amenable to discipline. They have a military set-up and are generally desirable material."

Next I wanted to know about the chances of a cadet who went on to college and joined an R. O. T. C. unit there. It was only then that I learned that I had tapped a very valuable source for this information. In past years, before he started on his duties as P. M. S. and T. of the Washington Cadet Corps, Colonel Craigie had served in the same capacity at both the University of Missouri and Washington University at St. Louis, Missouri.

The Colonel sat back and recalled, "While serving at these universities, I came in contact with many young men entering college who had had military training and some who had not. I found a very definite advantage was held by those students who had had this training in their secondary schools. Because of my desire to recognize this training, I wrote to the R. O. T. C. section of the General Staff in the War Department, requesting information relative to credits for students having previous military training in secondary schools. I was informed that credits for such training, to be applied to those students in the R. O. T. C. of the University of Missouri, was left entirely to the discretion of the P. M. S. and T. I have observed from my own records and from information furnished me by other Professors of Military Science and Tactics of several universities that the usual credit for military training in secondary schools is one year."

We appreciate this information very much, Colonel Craigie. And to you, for any advantages that may accrue from our training during our assignment with the corps, we, the officers and men of the Brigade, give our heartiest thanks. For the help and guidance you have given us throughout the year, altogether we salute you, Lieutenant Colonel Wallace M. Craigie, U. S. Army, Retired.

WE SUSTAIN THE AMERICAN IDEAL

By DR. FRANK W. BALLOU
Superintendent of Public Schools

IT IS with real pride that once again the Superintendent of Schools greets the Cadet Corps through the medium of its annual publication, THE ADJUTANT.

Over the long period of years that this organization has served the local schools, our faith in the young men who make up the Cadet Corps has been profound. It was upon this same expression of faith—a faith in a democracy—that the American republic was founded. It was this faith which through the years became incorporated into the many political, social, economic, educational, and religious institutions that have characterized our national life. And it is this same faith upon which we build our hopes today for the preservation of our nation and all the greatness it has achieved and will achieve.

The training which the cadets have received has served to develop a spirit of cooperation, to mold character, to create respect for authority, and to prompt dutiful service. Ideals have been set up and attained to a great extent by all of its members, which achievements stand as guides in adult life.

For those students who aspire to become cadets in the coming years, may the past attainments stand as goals for them. It is through the vigor of a strong and virile people, and through the orderly development of their capacities and institutions that we must sustain the American ideal and attain a stable and enduring civilization. The Cadet Corps serves to bring this American ideal into reality.

May the organization continue to serve the young men, the schools, and the citizens of the District for all time.

BRIGADE INSIGNIA

Brigade field and staff officers wear a six-pointed star, surmounted by the arms of the Corps, in lieu of any other insignia.

SHOULDER STRAPS

The insignia of rank used by the Cadet Corps is that authorized by the government for the use of the Reserve Officers Training Corps. The shoulder strap indicates an officer's rank and command. The Brigade field and staff officers wear straps having a broad gold stripe in the center paralleled by narrow black stripes and edged with a narrow gold one.

The Regimental field and staff officers wear straps having one and one-half inch gold braid bordered with a narrow black stripe. The Battalion field and staff officers wear stripes having a wide black band in center and paralleled by three-eighth inch gold stripes terminating in a point at the collar, as do all line officers. Silver buttons are used to denote the ranks from Second Lieutenant to Captain, in order of one to three, respectively. The Majors, Lieutenant Colonels, and Colonel wear silver diamond shaped devices, in the order of one to three, according to rank.

CHEVRONS

The chevrons are worn on the outer half of both sleeves, points up, midway between the elbow and the top of the sleeve.

SERVICE STRIPES

The length of service of a man in the Cadet Corps is shown by narrow bands on the sleeve below the elbow. Stripes are worn on the outer half of both sleeves, placed at an angle of forty-five degrees, the lower end being toward the inside seam of the sleeve and placed four inches from the end of the sleeve.

For each additional year another stripe will be worn above and parallel to the first stripe, with one-eighth inch space between stripes, the space being formed on the background.

The stripes are gold for commissioned officers and the non-commissioned officers of the Brigade staff. The enlisted men wear light blue stripes.

ADDITIONAL INSIGNIA

Other insignia are worn, such as those indicating the place in the Competitive

THIS year the Brigade Staff has been composed of as fine and capable officers as any commander could wish for. To them I extend my genuine thanks for their cooperation and faithful assistance in carrying out the duties that fall on the shoulders of the Staff. Major David A. Goldstein, Adjutant, deserves particular praise for excellent work relative to the Brigade Ball and for his fine aid in the formal inspection of the companies of the Brigade. I also wish to commend Major Walton Hudson for his unfaltering service throughout the year. Sergeant Major Kipperman and Color Sergeants Ashby and Wilhelm have performed admirably whenever called upon to assist.

Maintaining "esprit de corps" is the responsibility that the Staff has taken most to heart this year. Through it we have endeavored to bring the different units of the Corps to a better understanding and still closer relationship.

The principal duties of the Brigade Staff are:

1. To assist the P. M. S. and T. and his assistants at cadet competitions and in other work relative to the Corps.
2. To make a formal inspection of the companies of the Brigade.
3. To represent the Corps at ceremonies.
4. To manage the Brigade Ball.
5. To be responsible for the issuance of orders and the discipline of the Brigade.

Successful completion of Staff responsibilities would have been impossible had it not been for the cooperation of the officers of the Brigade. I fully appreciate their earnest efforts. Finally, on behalf of the entire Brigade, I thank Lt. Col. Craigie and the Military Instructors for their patient guidance.

THE CADET CALENDAR 1940-41

Sept. 22. Prospective cadet officers realize the Commissioned Officers test is at hand.

Oct. 7. Candidates for Cadet Colonelcy meet at Central High School for all important selection.

Oct. 8. Corporal David A. Rhodes of Eastern High School is announced as Colonel of the High School Cadet Corps.

Oct. 10. Cadet year gets under way as companies are organized.

Oct. 11. Roosevelt's Girls' Auxiliary honors new cadet officers with dance.

Oct. 16. Cadets assist Uncle Sam in his first move for national defense on Registration Day.

Nov. 5. Western's cadets enter politics by serving as ushers at Democratic Party Headquarters.

Nov. 11. A solemn privilege is granted ranking cadet officers of the Corps in participating in ceremonies at the Unknown Soldier's Tomb.

Nov. 20. Roosevelt and Western open social season with a bang. . . . both giving dances, only complaint being you can't be in two places at once.

Dec. 6. Feminine hearts flutter on T Street as Tech's Sabre Club entertains with its annual "Rugcutters Ball."

Dec. 12. Captain Paul L. Doerr, Central's military instructor, and Col. Craigie's able assistant, is given royal send-off as he departs for active duty in the service of our country.

Dec. 13. Pretty girls, plus music, plus cadets equals highly successful Regimental Ball. You guessed it! Central's social season springs into life.

Dec. 21. Tech's cadets do their bit for worthy charity by serving as Guard of Honor for the "Doll House."

Dec. 23. Competition runs high as Western's squads compete under the critical eye of Cadet Lt. Col. Irons.

Dec. 24. President Franklin D. Roosevelt lights National Community Christmas Tree as Colonel Rhodes and the lieutenant colonels serve as a Guard of Honor.

Dec. 27. Tech's second dance, as given by the Chevrons Club, finds cadets in full swing. And we do mean Swing.

Jan. 17. Eastern's gold braid boys, otherwise known as the Officers' Club, keep social ball rolling with a dance.

Feb. 3. Balloons, merriment, and the music of the Virginians serve to make Roosevelts' Regimental Ball a huge success.

Feb. 7. Because of other activities at Tech, the manual trainers try out their steps in the Roosevelt Gym.

Feb. 21. Cadets at Anacostia realize the pleasures of cadet life at their big hop.

Feb. 22. Twelve hardy Tech officers act as Grand Marshal Staff in the George Washington Parade at Alexandria, Va.

Feb. 23. Tech's ever-ready cadet officers are in action again during the raising of the colors at the Washington Cathedral.

Feb. 28. A semi-blizzard fails to halt Western's or Coolidge's intrepid warriors and their dates as they march in mass to attend their respective hops.

March 4. The officers of our newest addition to the Brigade, Coolidge High School, proudly participate in the dedication of their beautiful school building.

March 11. Anacostia's officers judge rifle manual competition with the P.-T.A. furnishing the awards.

March 13. Central's jitterbugs go at it again.

March 19. Nervous cadet officers of the Brigade meet at Eastern with Major Barkman to inspect new site of Regimental and Battalion Competitions.

March 21. With Ray King furnishing the music at the Kennedy-Warren, the cadet officers of the Brigade and their dates dance in a blaze of gold through the biggest evening on the social calendar, the Brigade Ball.

March 24. Regimental Drill postponed because of rain.

1941 BRIGADE RIFLE TEAM

By SGT. ROBERT F. KREIMEYER, H. S. C.

IN February 1941, the Brigade Rifle Team tryouts were sent in. Any cadet in the District of Columbia Public High Schools is eligible to participate in the tryouts. This year Roosevelt, McKinley, Anacostia, and Calvin Coolidge tried out. From the targets sent in by the cadets, the fifteen aggregate scores composed the team. In March these men shot in the Third Corps Area Intercollegiate Rifle Match. The ten high scores counted and the individual high scores counted and the individual high scorer was to captain the team.

The next match that was shot was the William Randolph Hearst Trophy Match. The team consisted of the five highest men in the Third Corps Area Match. The total team score in this match was 890.

The fifteen high men of the Brigade Rifle Team this year are: Robert F. Kreimeyer, Captain, Roosevelt; John W. Fondahl, McKinley; Dick Merrill, McKinley; Leo Borah, Roosevelt; Edmund Flynn, Roosevelt; Carlton Cloizewski, Anacostia; Arthur G. Sands, McKinley; Ralph Thompson, Roosevelt; Jack Flaharty, Roosevelt; Ralph Rizer, McKinley; Arthur Williams, McKinley; Paul Staubus, McKinley; Kenneth White, Anacostia; Nelson C. Vance, Anacostia; Thomas Moncure, McKinley.

In 1942 we wish the next team the best of luck and we regret that some of us will not be able to shoot with them. We hope they will establish a new high score so as to take first place in next year's Hearst Trophy Match.

Had it not been for Lieut. Carl Trometre, who has charge of the ordnance in the Washington High School Cadet Corps, our team would never have been able to achieve the records which they did this year.

LIEUT. CARL TROMETRE,
U. S. ARMY, RET.
In Charge of Ordnance Equipment

The Brigade Rifle Team of the Washington public high schools was first organized in 1921, by Walter R. Stokes, a former cadet of Central High School, now Dr. Walter R. Stokes of this city.

Dr. Stokes was then the champion rifle shot of the world, having defeated the world renowned Swiss Team.

And so it is Dr. Stokes that we owe our chance to be able to shoot in the Washington public high schools today.

ARMISTICE DAY

By LT. COL. JACK F. BENNETT, H. S. C.

TRADITIONALLY on Armistice Day the Washington High School Cadet Corps pays tribute at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. On the cold, gray morning of November 11, 1940, the Colonel and the commanding officers of each of the District public high schools assembled at Arlington for this purpose. The accompanying officers stood at reverent attention as Colonel David A. Rhodes placed a wreath at the base of the tomb. After this presentation on behalf of the District Board of Education, Lt. Col. John Anderson of Central High School stepped forward with a floral offering presented by the Jamaica Plains High School of Boston.

When the bugler sounded "Taps", a great calm settled over the gathered spectators as they stood with bared heads, impressed with the deep significance and awful majesty of the scene. To the cadet officer looking beyond the tomb of purest marble to Washington and its memorials to its known heroes, the thought came of the determination, unselfishness, and valor of the unknown and unsung warriors who gave their lives that our liberty might live. Surely this experience had made a lasting impression on each of these cadet officers before they marched away.

COL. RHODES and LT. COL. ANDERSON placing wreaths at Tomb of Unknown Soldier

From the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier the commanders proceeded to the tomb of Colonel Alexander G. Maish, former military instructor at Central, Eastern, Business, and McKinley High Schools, and to the tomb of Lieut. Joseph G. Murphy, a cadet instructor at Western and Wilson. Before these graves, standing at present saber, the officers observed a few minutes' silence in respect for two men who had served so well in the advancement of the High School Cadets.

ORGANIZATION DATA

UPON the opening of school every year, each Military Instructor is confronted with the big task of organizing cadets into a unit set up by the tables of organization as prescribed by the school authorities.

The following tabulation will aid materially any instructor in the organization of his Cadet Unit, especially in computing the probable number of companies into which he may organize:

THE SIXTH REGIMENT

WOODROW WILSON HIGH SCHOOL

By LT. COL. JACK BENNETT, H. S. C.

AFTER I had joined the Cadet Corps with preconceived notions of its value, I heard many doubting voices: "What good are they?" "Why join the Cadets?" "Everything the Cadets teach can be learned in camp in one week." "You can get twice as much exercise in the gym." "I can think of much better ways of spending my money than on uniforms." Such statements as these disturbed my confidence. These discordant notes caused me to resolve to attempt an impartial examination of the Cadet Corps, to assay the worth of its training to myself and my nation. I desired to weigh the advantages and disadvantages in order to satisfy myself of the benefit of Cadet training.

Some of these statements were obviously true; yet I could not believe that they presented a complete picture of the organization. I sought other angles from which to approach the Corps. I found many. Certainly, the actual military knowledge gained in the Cadets could be driven into one in a week of intensive Army camp training; but, after all, our nation needs more than automatons armed with a definite quota of facts. It needs men trained in cooperation and discipline, men with experience and ability in leadership. I willingly admitted that far more strenuous exercise could be got in the gymnasium. However, I realized that the result of cadet physical training is an erect, inspiring, healthy bearing. The complaint of the cost of the uniform was a natural one, but here certainly not a valid one. The cost of a Cadet uniform after deducting the second-hand sale price, is small, and surely the cost is insignificant for a suit that is worn twice-weekly during the entire school year.

My inquiry convinced me that even if these objections could be sustained, they would be preponderantly outweighed by the advantages of Cadet work. I found that the Corps acts as a deep incentive to scholastic achievement through its basis for advancement—sixty per cent school grades and forty per cent military grades. The cadet is thus set a goal far more tangible than the satisfaction and honor of mental advancement. Ambitious of distinction in the military, he must inevitably exert himself in his required studies. I saw further a much to be desired result accruing from one of the strict Cadet requirements: neatness. Unconsciously, or consciously and intentionally, its effect is extended into the Cadet's civilian life. Its imprint remains with him long after he has laid aside uniform; and certainly cleanliness of person and freshness of apparel have ever been rewarding personal attributes. Moreover, through my searching analysis of the organization I realized that the Cadet Corps teaches, through experience, these maxims: that success is the reward of hard labor; that in cooperation lies strength, and that lost time cannot be retrieved. As I advanced in the Corps another and most important profit became apparent to me. It became obvious that Cadet work affords the opportunity for training in leadership, that quality so vital in the achievement of almost any success. This training discloses any weaknesses of character and provides the instrument for their removal. It imbues the student with a self-confidence that will lead and encourage him to a greater stature.

The completion of my analysis finds me, as in the beginning, with a belief in the value of Cadet training, but my opinion is now founded on my own experience and my own investigation. Now I am grateful for my decision to join the Cadet Corps; and I am poignantly conscious of its abundant contribution to the framework around which my life's career will be built.

ATTAINING THE ATTAINABLE

ALTHOUGH the Wilson Cadets tried very hard last year, their companies in the competitive were not successful. Irrespective of the results of the coming competitions, we shall not waver; but rather we shall increase our effort in the direction of attaining the attainable: a winning company for Woodrow Wilson High School.

We Ask for guidance

We Seek knowledge

We Knock at the door of success—and yet again we knock

Some day that door shall be opened to us.

Notwithstanding our sincere regard for the feelings of other contestants we do now proclaim:

1. We are not inferior.
2. We are not superior.
3. We shall never despair.

DURING this year, because of the unceasing efforts on the part of Captain Worth, Captain Balls, Captain Wensel, and their competent lieutenants, the companies of the First Battalion have been molded into precision troops. I watched this process with keen anticipation, for more than ever in the senior year does one hope for victory. However, win or lose, I know all the members of my battalion will remain "real cadets."

As the cadet year rapidly draws to a close it brings to mind the memories, both good and bad, of past cadet days. It brings to mind the day when our squad was voted prize squad, the drilling in the hot sun as contrasted with the bitter cold of mid-winter, the Colonel's inspection, the coming and going of the Battalion and Regimental Drills, and a host of others.

Then the spring of the year came with its feverish preparations for the drill of drills, the Company Competitives. The tension spread throughout the regiment. Competitive spirit ran high. Finally the day came, bringing with it joy to some and disappointment to others, but genuine relief to all. As I look back on these days, I realize how greatly I enjoyed them. To leave the Washington High School Cadet Corps will be a difficult thing, for it will culminate my three-year activity in an organization which I have thoroughly enjoyed.

In conclusion I would like to extend my heartiest thanks to my line Captains, their Lieutenants, my own staff officers, Lieutenant Gude, Battalion Adjutant, and Lieutenant Isaminger, Battalion Supply Officer, and Lieutenant Trail, our military instructor, for their splendid cooperation and earnest work throughout the year. Although I turn in my saber with much regret, I leave the Sixth Regiment with my sincere congratulations and best wishes to the non-commissioned officers, your officers of next year.

IN FUTURE years I shall have behind me one of the great steps in the ladder of my life, the Majority of the Second Battalion, Sixth Regiment. It was a privilege to have worn the silver diamonds; to have had them represent two of the ablest companies at Woodrow Wilson.

As Major of these units, I have watched them develop into companies that Wilson may be proud to march in competition. From the tallest man of the Battalion under Captain Ben Pugh, to the smallest man of the Regiment commanded by Ted Davis, this fact is outstanding. I feel confident that from the ranks of two such companies will come officers worthy of the attention they will draw.

It is difficult to make predictions, accurate ones, but for this year and coming ones, with such a leader as Lieutenant Trail, almost any victory can be ours. This year as every year before, Lieut. Trail has done the heavy part of the job. The rest of the lightened burden has been carried fully by my officers.

To Lieut. Trail, a real military instructor and true friend, I extend grateful thanks. To all of the officers who have served around me, my heartiest thanks are given.

TO WHAT END?

By MR. LAWRENCE G. HOOVER
Principal of Central High School

DURING the past ten years more than twenty thousand Washington high school boys have participated in cadet activities. At least forty thousand relatives have shared the enterprise with these boys. Counting the cadet organization in each school as constituting 30 per cent of the student population, we find that 67,000 high school youths have given interest and support to the various school units. Not less than 100,000 people, probably twice that number, have witnessed the annual company competitives over these years.

And if we wish to continue statistical, we might estimate the money invested, at twenty-five dollars per cadet, as a half million dollars which have gone into the hopes and aspirations, the shared fellowships and pleasurable activities, the unit enterprises and personal ambitions, the successes and disappointments shared and experienced by our boys.

Needless is the question, "To what end?" The cadet whose growth in manly character and personality qualifies him over the year or two or three of his cadet service, provides the answer to all skeptics.

Cadet training and service enrich life, develop personality, and mold character.

THE ETA SIGMA GAMMA CADET TROPHY

By CAPTAIN ROBERT L. HAYNE, H. S. C.

ETA SIGMA GAMMA, the cadet honor fraternity of Central High School, submitted to the First Regiment in February, 1939, a gold trophy to be presented annually to the best inexperienced private of that Regiment, as a reward for excellence in military science and tactics.

The trophy is awarded after a semester-long competition among the inexperienced privates of the regiment. During the cadet year the platoon commanders keep for each experienced cadet in their command a rating sheet, on which the cadet's daily drill is judged according to a point system designated by Eta Sigma Gamma in the rules governing the award. This point system, drawn up by a committee of cadet officers assisted by Captain Paul L. Doerr, former Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Central, is based upon one hundred points for each drill day. These hundred points are distributed among the qualities which the committee felt to be most indicative of an excellent cadet. There are twenty points each given for character, military poise and bearing, and the uniform. The twenty points allotted to the correct wearing of the uniform are distributed into separate divisions, a certain number going for brass, for the cap, for shoes, and the like. Ten points each are given for the execution of the manual of arms, drill performance, attendance and promptness. Since there are separate awards for skill in the execution of the manual, it was thought that the points allotted thereto should not exceed those allotted to other qualities by which it was felt an inexperienced private can well be judged.

The selection of the winner is then made by the Officers' Club of the First Regiment, from among the inexperienced privates who are found to rank highest in their respective platoons.

The winner's name is engraved on the trophy, which is then presented to him at a school assembly by the president of the fraternity.

It is the belief of Eta Sigma Gamma that a good cadet will become a better one if his earnest efforts are appreciated and recognized by his officers. In the words of Mr. Lynn Woodworth, Military Instructor at Central, "Superior performance merits an award—recognition furnishes an incentive for continued top flight performance."

THE FIRST REGIMENT

By LT. COL. JOHN H. ANDERSON, H. S. C.

THE Washington High School Cadet Corps is an organization of which we may all be justly proud. We, at Central, are even more proud of the fact that fifty-nine years ago, in 1882, the first companies of the Cadet Corps were formed at our school. Although beset with difficulties, the members of those forerunners of our present brigade, through hard work, overcame them. The cadets of today, in the same spirit, prove that they have the perseverance necessary to win out in spite of all obstacles.

When the First Regiment was formed early in October, enough men were present to form two battalions of two companies each and a band smaller than that of the preceding year. Confronted with this first disappointment of having the smallest regiment of recent years, the members of the band and the companies resolved to maintain and improve, if possible, the quality of past years.

Soon it was learned that the regiment was to lose to active service its able and efficient military instructor, Captain Paul L. Doerr, who was himself Captain of Company F, Eastern, in 1924. In this case our loss was also the loss of the whole brigade. The search for a more competent officer would be long and arduous indeed. At this time the First Regiment was very fortunate, for, to take over the position of military instructor, we had our former basketball coach, Mr. Lynn Woodworth, who had volunteered to give his time and services to the Cadet Corps.

The added disadvantage of being deprived of the use of our stadium only served to increase the spirit of cooperation combined with determination which had manifested itself early in the year. Forgotten were personal likes and dislikes, discarded were personal ambitions. Instead there was a unified desire to excel in every way. Following in the footsteps of last year's officers, whose difficult task it was to teach to the men the new infantry drill regulations, the officers and non-commissioned officers have devoted themselves to helping the boys to excel. Spurred on by the indomitable will to win and by the spirit instilled in them by their instructors, Captain Doerr and Mr. Woodworth, the cadets of the First Regiment, regardless of the results of the competitions, cannot lose. They have felt the real pleasure of having worked hard and attained that goal of perfection.

My four years as a cadet have well illustrated to me that maxim which appears in this yearbook, "Save he serve, no man can rule." This axiom epitomizes the whole purpose, the whole motive force behind the Cadet Corps-service. Every man, private, non-com, or officer, realizes this. It is our boast that when the school wants something done well it calls on the Cadet Corps.

Of such a body, then, it has been my privilege and honor to serve as commander during the past school year. I must feel, therefore, in spite of whatever I may have done during that time, that I have derived more from my membership in the Cadet Corps than I have given to it, for it has been my honor to be the commander of what I believe to be the finest group of boys in the country.

IT gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to thank my able and willing staff officers, Lieutenant Leroy Owens, Battalion Adjutant, and Lieutenant David Hummel, Battalion Supply Officer, for their unrelenting efforts.

Company A, commanded by Captain Bernard Harrison, assisted by Lieutenants Howard Maurer and Paul Magdeburger, and Company B, commanded by Captain Richard Williams, assisted by Lieutenants James Anderson and Joseph Levin, are trying with the utmost effort to maintain the high standards of the First Battalion of Central High School. Through the diligence of these officers and their non-coms, the First Battalion has become a well-drilled, efficient example of military organization. The privates have cooperated to the fullest extent to make their company the outstanding company of all times.

At this time the First Battalion wishes to express its thanks to its new military instructor, Mr. Lynn Woodworth, who has so willingly and capably taken over the duties of Captain Paul L. Doerr, who has been called into active military service.

It is with genuine regret that I say farewell to the First Battalion of the First Regiment of the High School Cadet Corps, for my association with this worthwhile organization has been a pleasant one.

Good luck to you, Companies A and B, in the forthcoming competition.

"ALL OUT" TO WIN

By MR. LYNN WOODWORTH
Military Instructor, Central High School

MR. LYNN WOODWORTH
Military Instructor
Central High School
(Acting Assistant Principal,
Effective April 15, 1941)

THE benefits of cadet training, which account for the success and continued growth of our Cadet Corps, have been recognized for more than fifty years. Confidently we list the desirable learning situations that are set up; the teaching of organization and administration, the opportunities for leadership, the discipline, self control and adjustment to proper restraints, responsibility, courtesy, patriotism and loyalty to the Colors.

But here is something else—and the crisis the world is facing today brings it home, forcibly. The man who succeeds, the organization that wins, the nation that survives is the one that has learned to put aside all else for the drive toward victory.

Apart from war, fire, flood, or other grim tragedy there are few times in the life of the average man when he goes "all out" to do the job at hand. When he does so he frequently rises, as at Dunkerque, to deeds he never dreamed himself capable of performing. At such times he uncovers hidden powers and unknown talents. So, never again should he admit himself bound to mediocrity. For what man once hath done he can do again.

Every Cadet who has ever marched upon the competitive drill field has had the experience of going "all out" to win. He never forgets. Members of Central's Company A of 1888 still tell of the "time they won the drill." Every boy, from that day to this, has felt the same stirring thrill.

Those of us who watch them year after year are stirred too,—stirred by memories of company after company passing in review, till the faces of all the cadets we have ever known blend into a composite picture—the picture of a strong, clear-eyed boy, keen and alert, standing rigidly at attention. He flushes at the sound of Adjutant's Call. It is his turn now! His jaw is set as he awaits his commander's order to march. He has trained months for this moment. As he steps off in cadence, every fiber is tense, every faculty of mind and spirit is consecrated to the giving of the most perfect performance he is able to give. This is a strange something he never has felt before.

He does give it—and as he leaves the field he marches with a firm swinging stride, he looks straight to the front, he holds his head high—and within he glows warm with the satisfaction that can come only to him who has gone "all out" to do his best.

For this experience, surely, the boy will be a better man.

THE CHAIN OF COMMAND

As submitted by CAPTAIN PAUL L. DOERR, Infantry

"THE Commander of any unit is alone responsible to his superior for all the unit does or fails to do. Although he may be provided with a staff to relieve him of the burden of details and allow him time for consideration of the broader phases of his duties, he cannot avoid his responsibility for all policies, plans or basic decisions which affect the condition, morale, training or employment of his command.

"All orders and instructions from a higher unit to a subordinate unit are given to the commander thereof, and each individual is accustomed to look to his immediate superior for orders and instructions. BY THIS MEANS ALONE, AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY ARE DEFINITELY FIXED AND THE CHANNELS OF COMMAND DEFINITELY ESTABLISHED."

1ST. LT. RICHARD E. BERGER
SUPPLY OFFICER

AS A culmination of work in the Cadet Corps of the First Regiment, it has been my privilege together with Lieutenants George Kidwell, Adjutant, and Richard Berger, Supply Officer, to command the Second Battalion of Central High School.

Although many people are under the popular misconception that stature is conducive to a more profound drilling proficiency, we have noticed that the smaller boys make up for what they lack in size with a greater incentive to excell in the actual execution of the military drill. Special emphasis has been placed on military and personal appearance and in the snap and precision of executing both the manual and foot movements. In these, height is of no advantage, and under the capable leadership of Captains Robert Schroeder and Robert Hayne and Lieutenants Paige McLeod, Robert Archer, William Lilley, and John Rogers, Companies C and D have made remarkable progress.

It has been with reluctance that we have seen our military instructor, Captain Paul Doerr, also assistant professor of military science and tactics, leave for one year's service in the War Department; but Mr. Lynn Woodworth, recognized as one of Washington's finest physical training instructors, has assumed the post and is capably filling the vacancy. We want to thank both men for their intensive instruction and to acknowledge our value for their friendship and kindly advice.

CENTRAL'S "IN-SERVICE" MEN

By CAPTAIN IRVING HAMMERMAN, H. S. C.

"AND we wish the First Regiment the utmost success in all the duties it undertakes to perform." These were the words of Sgt. Edward Bennett who was speaking for Sgt. Warren Johns and Sgt. William Cooper as well as for himself.

These cadets who were Marine Reservists were summoned to active service last November. All were fine cadets as shown by the expeditious manner in which they performed their duties as non-commissioned officers of Company D.

Others whose service with the High School Cadet Corps, First Regiment, terminated before the annual inter-high competitions were held were Sergeants William Bateman, John Horne, Robert Milby, and Morton Miller, all attached to Regimental Headquarters; Sgt. Charles Lanehart, Band; Sergeants Allan Fagan and Thomas Elgen and Corp. Russell DeAtley, Company A; and Sgt. John Vaughan, Company B. These former cadets were well qualified to bear the title "non-commissioned officers of the First Regiment."

HISTORY

1937—The Woodrow Wilson Battalion increased in size so much that it was detached from the Fourth Regiment and was organized as the Sixth Regiment. Lieutenant William P. Trail was assigned as Military Instructor of the new regiment.

The plan originated of giving a cup to the regiment whose companies averaged highest in the annual Competitive Drill. The Lieutenant Colonel, Principal, and Military Instructor of the successful regiment receive the cup during the final review. The cup was awarded first to the Fourth Regiment, Western High School.

Lieutenant Joseph Murphy, military instructor of Western, died.

1938—The Anacostia High School Battalion, consisting of Companies A and B, was organized under the direction of Lieutenant Leslie Parmele. The new organization placed fourth in the Battalion Competitive.

Lieutenant George A. Hawkins assumed the duties of Military Instructor at Western High School, and Major William E. Barkman, who won the Competitive Drill in 1916, took over the same responsibilities with the Second Regiment at McKinley High School.

1939—New Brigade Colors were presented to the Brigade at Roosevelt High School to replace the old ones which had been in service for sixteen years.

1940—Following the similar action of the United States Army the Corps adopted the new drill regulations.

Captain Daniel Lloyd and Lieutenant Ralph Watt became affiliated with the Corps in the capacity of military instructors at Roosevelt and Eastern High Schools, respectively. Captain Lloyd replaced Lieut. Donald M. Brown at Roosevelt, who was relieved because of illness; Lieut. Watt replaced Captain Kelley who had been assigned to athletics.

The Lions Club of Washington instituted the William Miller Memorial Medal, a replica of the Allison Nailor Medal, to be presented annually to the winning company commander and to remain in his permanent possession.

1941—In December of 1940 Captain Paul L. Doerr was called to active duty at Headquarters of the Washington Provisional Brigade. Major William E. Barkman was temporarily appointed to replace Captain Doerr as Assistant P. M. S. & T. Shortly thereafter Major Barkman was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in the Field Artillery Reserve.

The Calvin Coolidge High School added to the Brigade a Battalion consisting of three companies in 1941. This unit is being trained by Roosevelt officers while it completes its first year of existence. Mr. Ryland M. Warren was appointed Military Instructor of the new Battalion. Mr. Thomas J. Holmes, new principal of the Calvin Coolidge High School, was called into service in his capacity of Major in the Infantry. Mr. John F. Brougher, assistant principal of Central High School, was appointed Acting Principal in his place.

Lieut. Justin F. Barnard replaced Captain Lloyd as Military Instructor of the Fifth Regiment at Roosevelt High School.

This year the cadets aided in the Registration of Selective Service Draftees, the first since the World War.

Thus the Cadet Corps has developed through fifty-eight years: from two companies at Central High School to thirty-two companies and eight bands distributed among the eight senior high schools. And so with each "Pass in Review" another group of young officers leaves the Corps, better fitted mentally, morally, and physically to meet a life of greater advantages. Although the names on the rosters may change, the spirit of the Corps remains, and lives on as a river flows slowly toward the sea;—never changing, never ceasing.

MR. FRANK C. DANIEL

Principal of McKinley High School

(Captain, Company B, Central, 1895-1896; Colonel of the Cadet Corps, 1896-1897)

A SALUTE TO TECH'S HIGHEST RANKING CADET—MR. DANIEL

By MISS LOUISE G. HART
Chairman, Military Committee, McKinley High School

THIS year McKinley High School has felt that it had a right to be proud of the Second Regiment,—the largest in the Brigade; to be proud of its officers, who stand unusually high in scholarship and in other school activities, as well as in their devotion to the H. S. C. Corps; to be proud of its men, who believe that being good cadets makes them worthy contributors to the great National Defense movement. But back of all Tech's pride in cadets is its pride in the unique distinction enjoyed by no other school,—that of having as principal a man who once led the High School Cadets himself, and who, at heart, is still a cadet.

The dictionary defines a cadet as "a gentleman who enlists in a regiment, as a volunteer private, to acquire military skill and obtain a commission." When this young gentleman enlisted in the cadets, more than forty years ago, we know that his purpose must have been high and his resolution great, because he succeeded in attaining such an unusual degree of military skill as to be awarded two commissions during his cadet service. After a year as private and one as a non-commissioned officer, he was made a captain and led his own company on the field, while in his senior year he was appointed to the colonelcy of the Brigade. Later, as teacher and principal, he has maintained those same high standards that we always look for and must find in an ideal cadet.

Private, Corporal, Captain, Colonel, Principal Frank C. Daniel,—the cadets of the Second Regiment salute you, their highest ranking officer. They have done well this year, but they will try to end the year even better, to show their pride in your record and in McKinley High School.

LT. COL. WILLIAM E. BARKMAN, FA-Res.
Assistant to the Professor of Military Science and Tactics
(Winning Captain, Company F, Eastern, 1916)

THE FACULTY MILITARY INSTRUCTOR

By MAJOR WILLIAM E. BARKMAN, FA-RES.
Military Instructor, McKinley High School

THE instructional force of the military department is composed of the Professor of Military Science and Tactics and eight military instructors,—one for each school—one of whom, in addition to his other duties, is designated as assistant to the PMS&T.

These military instructors are regularly appointed members of the faculties of their respective schools, having met the necessary qualification requirements and having passed successfully the prescribed examinations for teachers in one or more of the major academic fields. All have classes in some department of instruction other than the military.

Assignment as a military instructor is based upon the training and experience of the individual and upon something else which is even more important—his interest in the work.

The military instructor is charged with the organization, administration, and training of the cadet unit at his own school. In this he is responsible directly to the principal. At the beginning of each school year, he must select the officers and non-commissioned officers who will command and train the subordinate units. This is one of his most important duties, because, upon the wise selection of cadet leaders will depend the success of the year's training program.

As credit toward graduation is given for cadet work, the keeping of accurate records assumes major importance. Machinery is set up whereby certain cadets are assigned the duty of maintaining such records, but the final responsibility rests with the military instructor.

Military training, of course, constitutes the most important phase of the work. All drilling and most of the classroom instructional work is done after school hours. Drill regulations must be interpreted, ceremonies must be rehearsed and explained on the blackboard, questions must be answered, cadet instructors must be trained to command, all before the actual training of the companies takes place. Plans must be made and carefully checked for all competitions and other public appearances. The great size of the cadet corps presents transportation and traffic problems and necessitates proper coordination and exact timing.

This work cannot be accomplished without the expenditure of considerable time and effort on the part of the military instructors. Constant study of the regulations is necessary to keep in touch with important details of training. War Department changes in drill and tactics require interpretation and perhaps the revision of cadet drill and methods.

In order that procedures may be uniform throughout the entire brigade, frequent conferences of the instructors are held. At these meetings plans for coming drills and ceremonies are discussed, uniform interpretations of drill regulations are agreed upon, problems arising in the various units are presented and solutions suggested and adopted.

These instructors' conferences are conducted in the spirit of cooperation and mutual helpfulness. Valuable information and suggestions are offered, to be shared by all for the good of the brigade as a whole. Differences of opinion and criticisms are stated openly and settled amicably so that no discontent nor discord may be allowed to mar the efficiency of the work.

It is not to be contended, nor would it be desired, that the military instructors remain strictly neutral at the time of the annual competitions. Each wants his own unit to win success, and each gives his best efforts to that end. But the military instructors are not in competition with each other for flags, or cups, or medals. They are a group of interested men working as a group for the development of young American manhood.

THE SECOND REGIMENT

McKINLEY HIGH SCHOOL

By LT. COL. JOHN W. FONDAHL, H. S. C.

AS THIS cadet year comes to an end, the officers of the Second Regiment look back upon their years in the corps with the satisfaction of knowing that, regardless of the awards which they have received, they have attained the maximum benefits from their training. They have become outstanding citizens in the school and the community; they have developed their leadership ability; and they have improved their character. In all, they have achieved, as far as possible, the ultimate aims of the Cadet Corps.

The regiment was characterized this year by the excellent cooperation and companionship among the officers and among the men. This spirit prevailed during the drills, during the various schools, and during the Saber and Chevrons Clubs meetings.

The Saber Club dances were the school's social highlights of the year. They were very well attended and were complimented by all for the excellent style in which they were put over. Financially successful, the dances furnished money to make contributions to several school organizations, to present the school with a set of flags, and to sponsor an entertaining Cadet Night program.

Col. Barkman was responsible more than any one person for the advancement of the regiment towards its present state. He has given all of the time possible in helping the officers perfect their units for the year's competitions. Miss Hart, Miss Kingsley, and Mr. Krehbiel, as members of the faculty committee, have often aided us. We thank them all.

I wish to thank every member of my staff for the faithful execution of his duties and for his willingness to cooperate with me. To the two majors and their staffs this appreciation is also extended.

Every sergeant, corporal, and private is to be complimented on the part he has played in developing our regiment. Each one is responsible for a small and necessary part of the whole. This year's officers only wish that all of the future officers of the Second Regiment may enjoy their commissions as much and profit by them as much as we have during this past year.

BRIGADE BRIEFS

Colonel David Rhodes has become a familiar figure to us all this past year. His appearance and manner in dealing with the Brigade have well befitted his rank. However, several of his admirers have noticed that his apparent seriousness is often deceiving. We wish to congratulate him also as to his choice of a companion at the frequent cadet dances.

Reports have come out that it was quite difficult to get a date for the Brigade Ball over at Anacostia. First Lt. Elmore from way down in Rockhill, S. C., practically held a monopoly.

Here's hoping that "little Georgie" Lenwell of Company D, Central, will be able to see over the top of his saber by the time he becomes Colonel.

Ask First Lt. Volland at Tech why his car (?) is called Desdemona. Desdemona has few rivals in this world, one of them possibly being Major Edward Wolf's red trimmed, five passenger and up, Chevvy.

Speaking of cars, did anyone see Colonel Rhodes and three of his highest ranking officers pushing a car in the late hours of the night towards Four Corners? Or did anyone see the Sixth Regiment turn out to repair Lt. Col. Jack Bennett's flat tire one afternoon after drill?

What Captain of what company of Central expresses his artistic soul by crocheting?

Major David Jenkins of Anacostia has more than one reason for dismissing his battalion in the afternoons. The major must rush home to milk the cows and feed the chickens on his farm.

One of the prize contributions to the Corps this year has come from Wilson. There, every ranking officer has chosen a sponsor for his unit. With the permission of the principal and the yearbook staff, the picture of the sponsor will appear with the unit's picture in the yearbook. At the end of the year it is planned to have each sponsor review her unit before the school. Maybe this will be a future tradition of the Corps.

Did you hear Lt. Bill Gill of Central's Band tromboning through the auditorium? We are informed that a stretcher followed after.

Mr. Warren, instructor of the Brigade's new addition at Calvin Coolidge, can well say that he is acquainted with his men. He has not only learned the names of all the cadets, but he has taken photographs of them as well.

Captain Arthur Sands, on the eve of the Regimental and Battalion drills, was found to be in the hospital. The officers of Tech were notified that for the present only immediate members of the family and "Betty" might see him. Captain Sands was one of the Brigade's outstanding sharpshooters this year.

Nobody knew where the Colonel's staff disappeared to on a recent visit to Anacostia. It was probably only a coincidence that during the visit the girl cadets were drilling at the same time as the boys.

If you have a spare slug, give Captain Bernard "Absent-Minded" Harrison of Company A, Central, a ring to remind him that today is the Competitive Drill.

As both a cadet and a leader in his class First Sgt. Allan Johnson, Co. D, of the Sixth Regiment stands out. He has been elected president of the senior class and is also vice president of the school.

Captain Robert Kaufman of the Second Regiment in addition to his cadet work has gone out for athletics and is recognized as quite a track star.

Who is the common object in both the minds of Captain Girard Jetton, Co. A, of Calvin Coolidge, and of Captain Ben Fisher of Roosevelt's Band?

Lt. Col. John Anderson of Central plans to resign,—if the duties of his office entail the light fantastic.

We hear that the Brigade Officers held a little tea-party at G. W. U. on April 5. We wonder if this will be repeated in June.

SUPPLY OFFICER

LIKE every other commissioned officer, I shall regret the moment when sabers must be returned to the supply officer. The dictionary describes the saber as a sword having a somewhat curved blade. This may suffice as a mere physical definition, but to me the saber, which has always been a badge of authority, means much more. For two years it was a tangible goal, an object worthy of the effort spent in its attainment. It is a daily reminder of an officer's duty to his regiment, to his school, and to himself. The wearing of the saber signifies not only the gaining of a heart's desire but the acceptance of responsibility. It is to be worn only so long as is warranted by the faithful performance of duty. When an officer puts on his saber for the first time, he acknowledges the trust put in him, and recognizes the desirability of proving his worth. When he removes his saber for the last time, he knows whether he has succeeded or not. His success need not be measured by the wearing of medals and the cheers of the crowd. If he has performed his duty at all times to the best of his ability, he has been faithful to the trust which the saber represents.

I turn in my saber with sincere thanks to all who have served the First Battalion.

1ST. LT. HING HOY QUAN

FROM the beginning of the year when the Second Battalion was formed I have had a feeling of success and I know that when the last drill is over that feeling will be still with me. The men of the Battalion now know what real work is and I earnestly wish them harder work in the future and consequently more honor to them.

The Battalion is formed of three companies: C, D, E, Captains Sands, Vigderhouse, and Kaufman, respectively. They have done a fine job and I wish them every bit of luck in their company competition. They deserve to win the highest honors available.

Perhaps the factor that made my work in the Second Regiment most enjoyable is the loyal and hard work of my adjutant, Lieutenant Speaker, and my supply officer, Lieutenant Quan.

The Staff thanks each and every member of the battalion for his hard work and hopes, even if Tech never wins another drill, that they will keep up the good spirit and splendid work that has so distinguished Tech Cadets in the past.

WE CONGRATULATE the Adjutant upon producing a truly 100% Washington book and we are proud of our part in the production of the plates again this year.

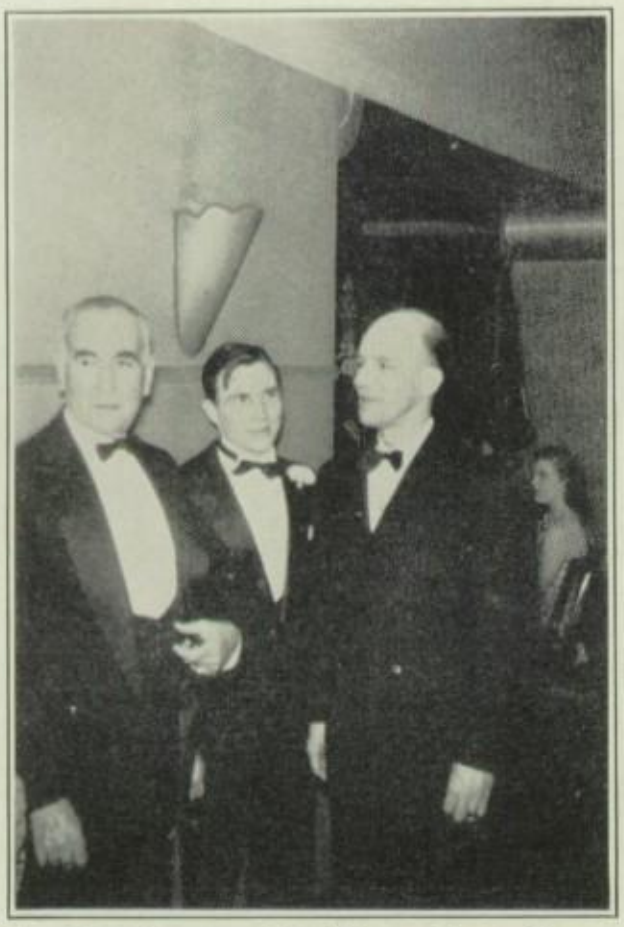
THE BRIGADE BALL

By MAJOR DAVID A. GOLDSTEIN, H. S. C.

THE crowning social event on the cadet calendar for the year 1941, the Brigade Ball, was held at the Kennedy-Warren, on the evening of March 21. Bracelets decorated with tiny crossed-sabers were presented as favors to the attractive young ladies escorted by the commissioned officers of the Washington High School Cadet Corps.

The ballroom was adorned with the splendor of the National and Brigade colors, over an array of Regimental flags. Snappy uniforms and fluffy evening gowns swayed together to the rhythm of Ray King and his orchestra. The highlight of the evening was the participation of the officers and their partners in the new dance craze, the "Conga".

THE BRIGADE BALL COMMITTEE



LT. COL. CRAIGIE, LT. WATT, CAPT. DOERR as Honor Guests

An "In-Between Dance" Moment

Gracing the affair with their presence, were the high school principals, the Colonel and Mrs. Wallace M. Craigie, the military instructors, cadet faculty advisers, and the parents of the cadet Colonel.

The occasion was a great success and the only regret of the cadet officers is that this was the only time that they could attend such a dance of their own as active members of the Corps.

THE THIRD REGIMENT STAFF—EASTERN HIGH SCHOOL

THE THIRD REGIMENT

EASTERN HIGH SCHOOL By LT. COL. ANTHONY B. MARMO, H. S. C.

THE Third Regiment of the Washington High School Cadet Brigade got off to a good start this year when Cadet David A. Rhodes captured the colonelcy for Eastern, after fourteen years of its absence from our school. Our hopes for five companies were shattered, however, when recruiting did not come up to expectations, and we had to be content with four full companies.

We have lost many good officers this year; but the junior officers taking their places have worked very hard to make themselves worthy of the regiment. We were truly sorry to lose Captain Donald L. Mangum, formerly commanding Company D, but he is now directly serving Uncle Sam in the Naval Reserves. Regimental Adjutant Warren Haugen is now doing his part in the defense work at the Washington Navy Yard. Captain Esch and Lieutenant Tucker further depleted our staff of officers when they left our ranks to take advantage of employment offered them. The Brigade Staff also took four very capable officers out of the regiment. Nevertheless, the present officers have worked very earnestly to make the Third Regiment a "first."

The February recruits greatly increased our strength, and have given our four companies average eight-man squads. They have so added to the membership of our band that we have been able to add a lieutenant to its commissioned staff.

I should like here to thank our principal, Mr. Charles Hart, for the encouragement he has given to me and to the regiment, and for the interest he has shown toward us. A former cadet officer at Eastern, he realizes our problems and helps us to overcome them.

Captains Davis of Company A, Shumaker of Company B, Hollihan of Company C, and Burneston of the Band have worked from the start to make their divisions what they are today, while Captain Miller of Company D, did a fine job of carrying on where Captain Mangum left off. Major Rosenblatt of the First Battalion and Major Gill of the Second Battalion put forth a lot of effort in preparing their units for the Battalion Competitive Drill.

Mr. William O. Tufts Jr., our new band instructor, has done a lot with the inexperienced band, and now we can truly say that it ranks with the best of them. Brigade Drum Major Barnes also deserves a lot of credit for his work on the Third Regiment Band.

Mr. H. D. Shorts, Chairman of the Military Committee here at school, merits a great deal of praise for the work he has done in this connection, and Lieut. Ralph W. Watt, our military instructor, has my personal thanks, and the thanks of the regiment, for all he has done to put it in shape.

The Officers' Club this year has done its part to promote "esprit de corps" in the regiment. We held a Sport Dance in the middle of January, and the Annual Regimental Ball in early April was a great success.

We must not forget that the non-commissioned officers, notwithstanding the fact that a large percentage of them is not very experienced, have done their bit for the regiment; and that the men in ranks, who really are the regiment, have worked very hard to master the drill.

One drill day, shortly after the beginning of this semester, I was observing the individual companies drilling on a street near the school. The men were marching in the proper cadence; the alignment was good; and the rifles were carried properly. But something was lacking. Just then, the Third Regiment Band turned into the street. It was not a very impressive unit—half the members were recruits, and were consequently without uniforms. But the Drum Major blew his whistle; the band began to play. The men in the ranks changed—you could not observe the change; you could feel it. The martial airs had awakened something inside them. Their step had not quickened, but it had become more lively; their eyes brightened; they stuck out their chests; they swung their arms; they marched, in perfect time with the band! They were proud, as I am proud, of the Third Regiment.

THE First Battalion, Third Regiment, this year consists of Companies A and B, commanded by Captains Davis and Shumaker, ably supported by Lieutenants Roberts and Huddleston, Brown and Moorhead, respectively.

Because of the Defense Program, the officers of the companies and staff have been changed. At the beginning of the school year the officers on my staff were Lieutenants Haugen and Tucker. Since the officers who were members of the Naval Reserve wanted to be graduated before being called to active duty they resigned. Then junior officers were appointed. My present staff consists of Lieutenants Moore, Adjutant, and Younger, Supply Officer. These new men, like my first staff, have been very helpful and have cooperated in every possible way.

1ST. LT. RUSSEL TUCKER
Former Supply Officer

The Defense Program has greatly stimulated the interest toward the Cadet Corps. This is shown by the increased number that have joined the Third Regiment.

When I received my command in September of last year, I had the dream of each Major in the Brigade,—to win the Battalion Drill. Although not successful, I am sure that each man in my Battalion did his best to bring home this honor to the Third Regiment.

On the final day of the Competitive Drill, each Major hopes that he will have the winning Company in his Battalion. Regardless of the outcome, we are confident that the Companies put out their best efforts.

My thanks go out to the privates and non-commissioned officers of the Third Regiment for their efforts that are necessary for good drilling.

Also our thanks go to Lieut. Ralph W. Watt, our military instructor, and to Mr. H. D. Shorts, our Chairman of the Military Committee, for their efforts in making us a well-trained unit.

In closing, my best wishes go to the present officers and men and to those who will take our places in the future.

CADET SPIRIT

By LIEUT. RALPH W. WATT, Inf-Res.
Military Instructor, Eastern High School

LIEUT. RALPH W. WATT, Inf-Res.
Military Instructor,
Eastern High School

CADET Spirit unendingly surprises those of us who look back to our own years in the Washington High School Cadet Brigade. The fleeting glance that reveals the half forgotten face of an old cadet friend passing on the street is usually quickly followed by a sudden call, a hearty handshake, and a conversation about cadet days that may well last beyond the time that either man can safely spare from the more urgent business that led him that way.

You cadets of 1941 are experiencing the deep, strong sense of unity, the "Esprit," of the Corps. Your friendships, your pride in individual proficiency, your sense of cooperation and achievement are among those aspects of Cadet Spirit that exist because of each cadet's feeling of that spirit, yet somehow continually increase it.

Strong rivalries exist and serve their purpose in a heightened sense of competition. Winning and losing bring immediately acute joy or regret to suit the circumstance. But these emotions fade into the background of the cadet graduate's memory as his later experiences sharpen his understanding of the fine comradeship that prevails among the former cadets of all schools.

Excepting only the unquestioned direct value of cadet training, certainly the greatest contribution of membership in the Corps is the planting of the seed of that which cadets have and non-cadets have not. The development will continue through the years until you, too, will learn the thrill of chance meetings with old cadets of whatever school,—with members of the Corps. Men you never saw before, older, younger, lawyer, laborer, doctor, mechanic, business man, will be immediately recognized as friends because of CADET SPIRIT.

THE SECOND BATTALION, THIRD REGIMENT

1ST. LT. JAMES E. QUEEN, JR.
ADJUTANT

MAJOR J. JOSEPH GILL
COMMANDER

1ST. LT. WILLARD H. HAWLEY, JR.
SUPPLY OFFICER

WITH the rapid approach of the competitive drills, all the officers are busy striving to turn out the best units they possibly can.

Fortunately, most of the officers are too absorbed in their work to pause to think that with the end of their drills their careers as cadets will be over.

After being in the Corps for three years it's hard to realize that I'm a major about to be graduated and end my cadet career, a career filled with hope, despair, and last, but not least, pride. It is with pride and fondness that I look at my battalion and think of the times I was a private and non-commissioned officer and now I am the commander.

It would be unfair for me to say that the organization of the second battalion of Eastern was accomplished solely by my efforts. My task was greatly alleviated by my able captains, Captain Hollihan of Company C and Captain Miller of Company D. Lieutenants Queen and Hawley, my staff lieutenants, also rendered me invaluable aid. I wish to take this opportunity to thank Lieut. Younger who served as my supply officer before being transferred to the first battalion and Captain Barbera who served as my supply officer also before being promoted.

All of the assistance however did not come from within the battalion, for the two men who have kept the whole regiment moving, Lieut. R. W. Watt and Lt. Col. Marmo, military instructor and regimental commander, respectively, have had a great influence on my battalion. One can hardly write about the Eastern Cadet Corps without mentioning the name of Mr. H. D. Shorts, chairman of the military committee, for he has rendered invaluable aid to all Eastern cadets.

In closing I would like to express my gratitude to the men in ranks whose co-operation has enabled the officers to progress so well, and wish them luck in the drills to come, for they will succeed the officers of today.

WASHINGTON—THE BOOM TOWN

Only ten cities in the United States are larger than Washington, D. C. According to 1940 census figures, the population of Washington has increased more than 36% during the past ten years.

Washington is a favored city in which to attend college and find employment. From June 1 to the present time, the office of Strayer College has been conscious of an increase in the demand for business education and trained office employees.

At the end of 1940, Strayer Employment Service tabulated 2019 employment calls for the year, an increase of 26% over the preceding year. From January 1 through March, 675 employment calls have been received at the office of Strayer College. At this rate, it is reasonable to expect 2700 employment calls during the year 1941. This can be estimated as a 35% increase in the demand for graduates of Strayer College.

Students, graduates, and prospective students should bear in mind the fact that these calls are coming from business and professional men and the field of private industry in the Nation's Capital.

Young people interested in business education and office employment should not get the impression that employment by the Federal Government is the only field of opportunity in Washington. It is difficult for the public to accept and believe the astounding fact that business and professional men and private industry in the Nation's Capital actually employ more people than the Federal Government here.

During the thirty-six years that Strayer College has been established in Washington, over 59,000 students have attended day and evening sessions for secretarial, accounting, and general business courses. The college estimates that throughout these thirty-six years, 26,000 alumni have entered Government service and 33,000 have found their opportunities in private business.

The up-trend in business and in employment in Washington has always been ahead of general improvement throughout the Nation. At the present time the demand for trained office workers is greater than the supply. Employers are actually on the waiting list, rather than well-trained applicants for office positions.

For these reasons, Washington has been advertised to the Nation during the past year by newspapers, magazines, and by radio as America's number one "Boom Town."

WE ARE CADETS

We are the pulse of a nation,
Marching in full array,
Leaders of men tomorrow,
Youth of the world today.

Hark to the cheering chorus,
March to the beating bands,
March for the flag before us,
Glory or shame in our hands.

Splendid in proud elation,
March for the world to see—
We are the pulse of the nation,
We are the leaders to be.

MY BOY!

That's my boy,
Wearing the ribbon.
He is one of the winners
In the Drill this year,
The Competitive Drill
Of our High School Cadets.
My, what an uproar
When they heard they had won!
Hats in air! Jumping!
And shaking hands!
Yelling like Indians!
I yelled too,
Just like the young ones!
And when I saw that Ribbon
On my boy's blouse
I felt mighty proud.

But after all
It isn't the Ribbon
That I'm so proud of:
It's the grit that
My boy showed winning it.

He earned the money
To pay for his uniform,
Wouldn't let me do it.
(I've put the same amount
In the bank, though, for him.)
Then he went out
Every Monday and Thursday
To march up and down
And do what somebody else told him to!

Obey orders, that's the thing.
When the instructor
Told him how to manage
His feet and his shoulders,
He couldn't argue—
Only listen and try to do better.
When his lieutenant
Told him he was too slow,
He couldn't sass back at him—
Only listen and try to be quicker.

He had to learn
How to care for a musket,
Carry it, hold it just right,
Change it from ground to shoulder
Just exactly as everyone else did.
And his uniform—
Gloves, cap, collar—
Boots all black and shiny!

Then he marched out on the field
With all of his friends,
And some of the others
That he don't care so much for.
But it's all the same,
For they're winners!

I'm mighty proud
Of that Ribbon,
And, though I don't tell everyone,
I'm mighty proud of my boy!

THE THRILL THAT COMES ONCE IN A LIFETIME

By MR. JOHN PAUL COLLINS

Principal, Anacostia Junior-Senior High School

WITH but two young companies representing our school, the awful moment during which the Adjutant paused before the Brigade just prior to facing right, or left, or proceeding down the center, might be called "life's darkest moment". The historical ratio 16 - 1 appeared to me to be very large odds. When the Adjutant proceeded straight ahead, they still looked pretty large; when he failed to stop, they dwindled into significance. "Surely," I thought, "it must be Company A. Company B has two squads of ninth grade boys in the first platoon and it is their first time under fire." But the members of Company B did not know the meaning of the word "defeat" and the rest is history.

I have been twitted about my exuberance immediately following the award. In the joy of such an occasion even a Principal has a right to climb up on a dug-out and wave his hat. I felt very much as did Mr. Charles Hart, Principal of Eastern High School, many years ago while he and I were attending the Eastern-Central baseball game. I had a few days before been appointed Assistant Principal. When I exhorted the Eastern boys to greater effort in the early part of the game, Mr. Hart in his inimitable fashion said, "Jack, be careful now, remember your dignity; you are the Assistant Principal of Eastern High School"; whereupon I immediately retreated behind a very stern countenance. About three innings later, when the score was tied and while there was a double row of Eastern and Central teachers sitting right behind us, one of the boys in the Eastern club drove a ball into deep left center field, which for a fast man should be a home run. By the time the boy reached third base, Mr. Hart—his hat gone and his hair awry—was wildly waving his arms, and I have no doubt but that his gesticulations aided the fast runner to beat the ball home and to break the tie. Needless to say both the double row of teachers and the Assistant Principal enjoyed Mr. Hart's demonstration of dignity more than the home run. I am sure everyone also enjoyed mine on Competitive Drill Day.

In all probability, future companies representing Anacostia High School will win the Competitive Drill and I hope I have the pleasure of again seeing these victories; but no matter what victories may come to us in later years, I doubt that any one will carry with it the supreme joy of a "first" victory.

THE opening of school in September found many changes in the military organization of the school. Lieutenant Hill's capabilities became known to the War Department, and he was made an instructor at the Engineer School, Fort Belvoir, Virginia. We wish to extend congratulations to Mr. Hill on his marriage to Miss King. Mr. Vasa was transferred to Calvin Coolidge. All we can say is what is our loss is the gain of the Army and the new Eighth Regiment. We wish them success in their new duties. Miss Grace King, who formerly took care of the records, has taken over the school treasury; so we have an entirely new committee. Captain Manoly has taken over the band instructor's duties. Mr. Williamson has charge of the uniforms; Miss Reardon has charge of records; and Mr. McCarthy has assisted with the Rifle Club.

With the organization of cadets in October, we found a very decided increase in our

ANACOSTIA HIGH SCHOOL By MAJOR DAVID F. JENKINS, H. S. C.

THIS YEAR the battalion got off to a fine start with the memories of Company B winning first place in the Company Competitive Drill fresh in our minds. However, the officers feel that last year is in the past and we must look forward into the future to keep Anacostia in the winning column.

In September we had a larger enrollment than ever before, but we had a larger band, so that we could not form but two companies as before. In February, through the work of the military instructor, Lieut. Parmele, Mr. Collins, our principal, and Band Captain Francis Cox, the band was increased to forty pieces and helped the drilling very much. When the ninth grade boys signed up, we found we had enough boys to form three full companies.

Now as I "return saber" for the last time and my Cadet days are over, I wish to thank Col. Craigie, Col. Barkman, and Cadet Col. Rhodes and his staff for the help they have given me. I also wish to thank Mr. Collins, Mrs. Corkery, our assistant principal, and members of the faculty for their kind and untiring assistance. Last but not least, I want to thank Lieut. Parmele, Captain Manoly, members of the Military Committee, and my fellow officers for their help and advice.

enrollment, causing our two companies to be very large and unwieldy. We were very much pleased with the February enrollment, which gave us a sufficient number of cadets to warrant the forming of the third company.

The cadet band was placed under the command of Captain Francis Cox, who was drafted from last year's winning company. The interest shown for this organization, its rapid strides in development, and the added "esprit de corps" to the entire Battalion have been most gratifying to us. We are likewise very proud that the Anacostia Separate Battalion was able to compete with its own band this year, and that Anacostia was represented in the Annual Band Competition.

The band is indebted to the Rifle Club for three field drums, to the Parent-Teachers Association for a pair of cymbals and to Principal Collins for two saxophones and an alto horn. At this time we publicly should extend our thanks to these donors.

In its second year the Rifle Team has enlarged its activities by participating in inter-school shoulder to shoulder matches. The members are enjoying and gaining valuable experience from this competition even though they are not in the winning column. The Rifle Club is sponsoring an award of a seven inch "A", superimposed on a target to the outstanding members of this team. Three of these members, Carlton Kloczewski, Nelson Vance, and Kenneth White, have secured positions on the Brigade Rifle Team.

The Parent-Teachers Association at its March meeting made the following awards in the Annual Manual of Arms and Saber Competition:

Saber Manual	S. Chester
Best Sergeant	C. W. Curtis
Best Corporal	D. H. Margolis
Best Experienced Private	J. E. Gardner
Best Inexperienced Private	H. C. Bourne

With the unparalleled record of last year still fresh in the minds of the cadets, the forming of a third company, and the entering of our band in competition, we find a wonderful spirit to carry on and we of Anacostia wish the cadets the greatest success in these ventures.

THE ALLISON NAILOR MEDAL

FOR THE WINNING CAPTAIN

ALLISON NAILOR

By CAPTAIN SELIG CHESTER

TO THE general public the most important event of the year is the annual company competitive drill at Griffith Stadium to determine the best drilled company. The winner is allowed to wear the Allison Nailor Medal until his graduation, at which time he returns it to the school authorities.

Captain Allison Nailor of the Washington Light Infantry, in the hope that it would help to create a greater interest and a higher standard of cadet proficiency, donated this medal to the High School Cadet Corps in 1895.

Valued at four thousand dollars, the medal measures two and one-half inches wide by three and five-eighths inches high. It is made in two parts. The upper portion is composed of a golden eagle which clutches in its talons several rifles and a sword. The lower part is made up of a five-pointed star on a shield with the United States colors draped behind. On each point of the star a pure white diamond weighing about one carat is mounted.

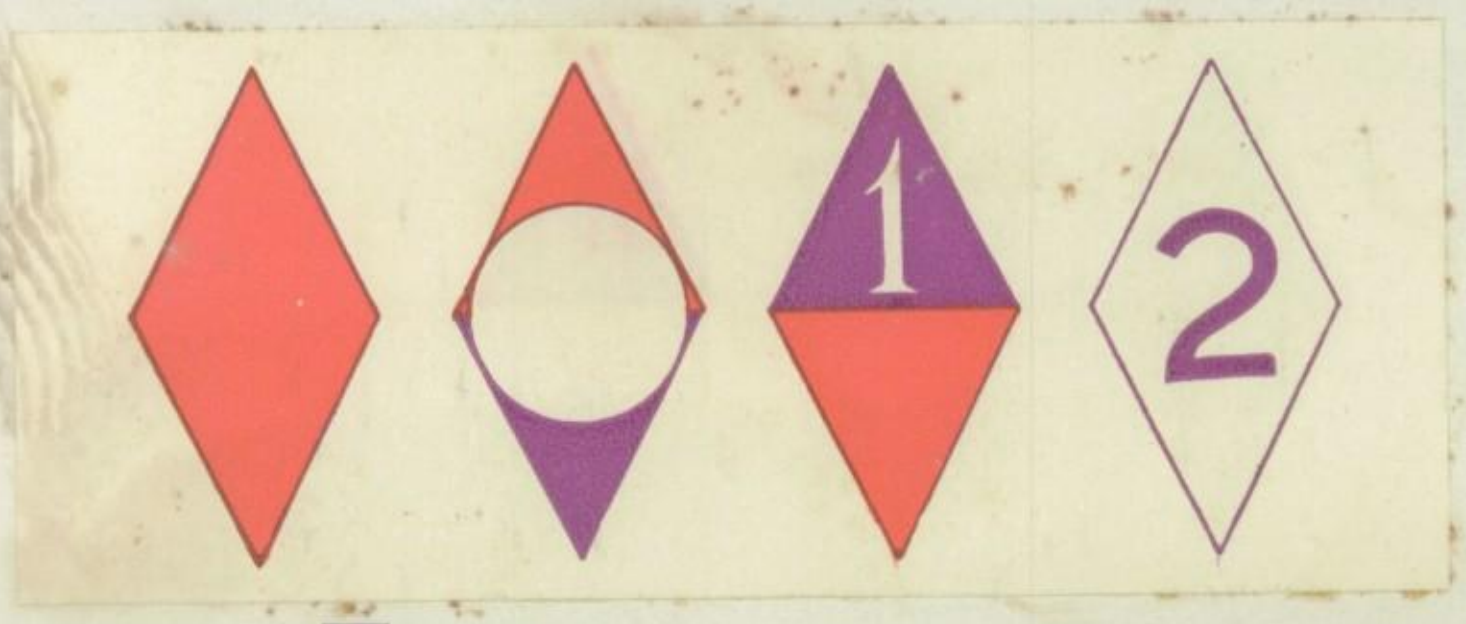
The initials of the Corps, H. S. C., are emblazoned in the star, which is encircled by a laurel wreath. The face of the medal carries the inscription:

ALLISON NAILOR
PRIZE MEDAL
1895

The inscription on the reverse side reads: "This medal is donated to High School Cadets of Washington, D. C., to stimulate them to a higher degree of proficiency and skill in military knowledge by Allison Nailor; and is to be worn by the captain of its best drilled company."

It is the ultimate desire of every company commander to wear this coveted medal, but only one a year has the honor.

COMPETITIVE DRILL INSIGNIA



THE insignia for cadets who win a place in the Company Competitive Drill is a diamond worn on the sleeve, touching the right shoulder, the color—red, or purple, or white—indicating the order of merit. A diamond divided into two parts of two different colors, shows two different honors; a round disc of a different color upon a diamond of two colors shows the different honors; while the figure 1 or 2 upon a diamond shows that the same honor has been twice or thrice won. Watch the diamonds!

Members of the winning band in the Band Competition wear a red cloth lyre.

Those cadets whose battalion places first in the Battalion Competitive Drill are, under the present system, entitled to wear a gold star pinned on the left cuff; a silver star is worn for second place.

Cadets whose regiment places first wear a gold diamond pinned on the left cuff, and a silver diamond for second place.

INSIGNIA

Drill and the Military Map Problems. These are further described on other pages in this volume. The Honor Regimental Diamonds and the Honor Battalion Stars are worn on the left cuff. They are placed with one of highest rank to the right, as gold diamond, silver diamond, bronze diamond, gold star, silver star, bronze star. The center of each is placed on the seam of the cuff and all are spaced equally, the colors gold, silver, and bronze, denoting first, second, and third place, respectively.

Red cloth lyre for first place band is also authorized; purple for second, and white for third place bands.

COAT-OF-ARMS

All cadets wear on the cap and on both sides of the upper lapel of the blouse the official coat-of-arms of the Corps, which is worn horizontally, lower edge one-half inch above horizontal line of lapel, in prolongation of a vertical line through the center of the eagle to be one and five-sixteenth inches from the point of the lapel.

CROSSED RIFLES

The officers and enlisted men wear crossed rifles on the lower lapel to denote their regiment and company, horizontally on the lapel, the upper edge one-half inch below the horizontal line of the lapel and centered below the coat-of-arms.

Adjutants are distinguished by a shield and Supply Officers by a supply officer device placed in the lower angle of the crossed rifles.

A GLORIOUS TRADITION

By LT. COL. ROBERT IRONS, H. S. C.

THE Fourth Regiment's renowned list of triumphs has built a tradition which, in itself, is an invaluable aid in preserving the spirit which is responsible for this continued winning streak. The potency of a tradition which is enhanced after each competition is evident to every member of the Fourth Regiment.

This heritage began away back in 1895 when Joe Taussig, now an admiral in the United States Navy, captained Company H to Western's first victory in the Company Competitive. Its path is seen like a bright thread through the early years of this century, when captains of Western companies who have subsequently become famous included Campbell, now a Brigadier General in our Army, and Bland, later a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, only to fall in France in the First World War. There exists a multitude of anecdotes and stories concerning those youths who have won their share of glory in life as well as on the drill field, but lack of space prevents a full account.

A feature of this tradition, newly inaugurated but none the less impressive, has occurred at the presentation of commissions during the past two years. In 1940, Captain John Donaldson of Company H received his commission from his father, Major Thomas Donaldson of the Third Cavalry, while in this year, 1941, Captain Anton Anderson, U. S. N., presented the commission to his son, Alister Anderson, the captain of Company K. Instances like these are irreplaceable in the memory of every Western cadet.

THE FOURTH REGIMENT STAFF — WESTERN HIGH SCHOOL

THE FOURTH REGIMENT

WESTERN HIGH SCHOOL — By LT. COL. ROBERT IRONS, H. S. C.

AFTER three years of service in the High School Cadets, it is difficult to express my emotions, and since the benefits of voluntary training in military science have been extolled so often I shall pass over this phase, which has been lauded so justly. Rather I shall endeavor to recapture a few of the unalterable memories of that time during which I have worn the dark blue uniform.

There have been the piercing cold of winter inspections and the blazing sun of extended order drills. There have been the taut suspense before marching on the competitive field, and the triumphant exultation of hard-won victories. These years, punctuated with the pulsing beat of bands and the penetrating crack of rifle straps, are indelibly graven in my soul.

The greatest of man's glories is to toil unselfishly with his comrades in an undertaking which consumes his entire attention. Somehow, as the tramp of marching feet reverberates no more, I cannot feel that these years have been in vain. Rather I cherish the knowledge that they have been the most profitable and joyous of my life.

To my colleagues and instructors, I can say little. Their labors are producing ample rewards which need no additional embellishment. As I relinquish my saber to my successor, I can only admonish him that the blade once belonged to one who loved it and the ideals which it symbolized.

THE SPIRIT OF VICTORY

By LIEUT. GEORGE A. HAWKINS
Military Instructor, Western High School

THOSE boys in uniform, wearing clean white shirts and clean white belts! They are symbols of a spirit which exists at Western. It is a spirit which we, as Westerners, think goes unequalled, giving, not only an incentive, but also guidance and direction. Since coming to Western I have seen the two causes of this spirit: the principal of Western, Dr. Elmer S. Newton, and the Cadet Corps, itself.

LIEUT. GEORGE A. HAWKINS
Military Instructor
Western High School

Of the hundreds of students who have gone through Western, I think that not one has forgotten his principal who has always shown such leadership and who has always given to the school an untiring effort toward the betterment of the pupils. With such leadership the Cadet Corps has always furnished the student body with a high degree of manhood which has carried over into all extra-curricular activities. It has taught cooperation, leadership, and discipline, invaluable assets, not only to the individual, but to the school and to society. On such a foundation Western's spirit has been built. It is a spirit that has made Western unique, that has given to Western a glorious record of which she will always be able to boast.

Win or lose, the Cadet Corps of Western has always accomplished the purpose for which it was intended. It has built, and it is still building, the moral standards of the cadets. It is giving leaders who will be able to go forth, having gained character traits together with a physical and mental coordination that will enable them to be true leaders.

Seeing Western enter into its fifty-first year of existence, I am happy to be able to say that the Cadet Corps is again conforming with the great tradition set forth by the cadets of the first fifty years, and I can not see how the cadet corps of Western can ever die so long as it retains that great spirit and so long as it has the incentive of such a leader as Dr. Elmer S. Newton.

IN THIS year, 1941, after all the successful years of Western's cadet record, there is little that I can say about Western as a whole that has not been said before. It is sufficient to say that Western's cadets have carved an enviable military record for themselves. I feel sure, and I know that every Western cadet feels sure, that this record will be added to in future years.

Now to introduce the companies of the First Battalion. First, of course, there is Company H, composed of the largest boys in Western. Company H has always excelled in military drill, and always has an excellent appearance. Under the able tutelage of Captain John Harrison, Company H is moving steadily along in perfecting military proficiency.

Fully as efficient as Company H is Company L, the remaining company in the First Battalion. In the past few years, Company L has had bad breaks, and has not finished the company competitive "in the money." I know Company L, under Captain Patrick Dagg, is resolved to win a place this year. In truth, Company L's record is one of Western's best.

Together, these two companies comprise an excellent battalion, one which measures up to the standard set in previous years. Western's battalions have always been good, and this year's First Battalion is fully qualified to take its place in the Honor Roll of the High School Cadets.

THE Second Battalion is composed of the two shortest companies in the Fourth Regiment. The men of the companies are large, however, in their spirit and real cadet character.

Company K, led by Captain Alister Anderson and Lieutenants Edmund Preston and Robert Becker, is a company near to mechanical perfection. The remarkable progress of Company K in the past years has been quickened by its officers and men of this year. It is a company well suited to lead the Battalion on the field.

Company G, although not so large in physical make-up, is surprisingly strong in cadet spirit. When a company is under a test, the spirit shows its real value. Captain Lawrence Fagg and Lieutenants William Pippel and Keith Carr have, after great conscientious work, pulled the little boys up. Company G of the future will remember the hard working unit of 1941.

A unit composed of cooperative officers and men cannot fail to make a good showing. Whatever results the future may show, the Second Battalion is one that will make its impression at Western.

CADET TRAINING

By MISS MAY P. BRADSHAW

Principal of Roosevelt High School

ALL GOOD citizens in this democracy are looking for ways and means to develop in the youth of the nation those character traits which will serve to preserve the blessings of liberty to them and their children.

My confidence in the training which is offered to boys in the high schools in the Cadet Corps has grown with the years. I have seen so many hundreds of boys acquire through the discipline of cadet training those manly traits which bring happiness and success in life that I believe such training is the finest character building activity in our schools.

What are the mental and moral benefits which the boys get from their service in the cadets? They learn the value of coordination of mind and body, of team work, of unselfish devotion to the group, of clear thinking and prompt obedience to commands and the joys of comradeship.

As they gain experience in responsibility and cooperation and advance in rank, they develop those traits of leadership which all cadet officers must have to succeed. Ideals of scholarship, loyalty, industry and perseverance lead these young officers to grow into good citizens. These citizens are ready to take their places in a democratic society where character and leadership insure the well-being of the government.

THE FIFTH REGIMENT

ROOSEVELT HIGH SCHOOL

By LT. COL. KENNETH BROMLEY, H. S. C.

AT NO time during the entire history of the Washington High School Cadet Corps have the interests, desires, and needs of the nation as a whole become so closely correlated with the aims and ideals of our cadet corps. With "Preparedness" the keyword of our country and thousands of men interrupting the normal course of their lives to acquire the military training which will make "Preparedness" not a slogan, but a fact, it is a source of pride and satisfaction to every cadet that he has already availed himself of the opportunity to acquire the fundamentals of drill, tactics, and discipline that are so important to our country's welfare today.

It is a personal privilege that I cannot overestimate to be the commander of a regiment of our cadet brigade, and especially to be the commander of the Fifth Regiment. In my opinion, our regiment is emulating more closely the Regular Army of the United States than any other regiment in the entire Cadet Corps. I refer to the fact that just as the Regular Army has supplied the experienced men to form the nucleus of our rapidly enlarging military forces and the officers to train those troops, so has the Fifth Regiment of Roosevelt furnished the newest battalion of cadets, that of Coolidge High School, with experienced officers in order that this newest addition to the brigade may take its place proudly and efficiently with the older units upon the competitive fields this spring.

It is undoubtedly a fact, however, willingly as we may have rendered this service to Coolidge High and the brigade, that the Fifth Regiment has felt the drain on its manpower. From the largest regiment in its history in 1940, six companies in all, we are able to place only four companies upon the field this year. It is a conviction I share with my staff and the regiment, however, that, when the "Fifth" enters the competitions, it will be reduced in size but not in ability. Much credit is due every cadet from my staff down to the youngest recruit for the unceasing work that has been and is being done to preserve our high standards. Speaking of standards or records reminds me that we have here at Roosevelt an organization that has compiled within the past four years a record seldom, if ever, equaled in the history of the brigade—our cadet band. With three consecutive victories and a second behind them, they set out this year to surpass their past achievements, and proved quite capable of doing so under the leadership of Captain Ben Fisher and Drum Major Herbie Jones, both of whom are under the skillful eye of Mr. Jackson.

I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank Mr. Barnard, who in his first year in complete charge of military affairs at Roosevelt, has been a never ending source of advice and inspiration. Also I wish to express—through me—the appreciation and thanks of the entire regiment to the other members of the military committee, Mr. Brown, Mr. Littmann, Miss White, and Mr. Lloyd.

I WAS indeed pleased to be placed at the head of the First Battalion, Fifth Regiment this year. However, the source of pleasure came not so much from the enviable reputation of this Battalion that I was to command, as from the quality of the officers who were to be under me. These officers by their fine work during the year have justified this feeling. Both Captain Thompson of Company E and Captain Weise of Company G with the aid of their able lieutenants have brought forth the best that is in their companies, producing two well-drilled units, whose smooth functioning has formed an excellent First Battalion. My competent lieutenants, Lieutenants Hyman and Shalowitz, have been a constant help in properly carrying out the job assigned us. I must also commend the work of the non-commissioned officers, whose watchfulness has been the needed instrument for a well-trained Battalion.

In the Fifth Regiment teamwork has been the constant aim. We believe that only through the cooperation of every officer and of every man under him will a winning unit be produced; thus our motto: "A cadet never lets himself or his officers down".

Now the time approaches when I must relinquish my saber. On behalf of the First Battalion I wish to extend my heartiest thanks to our military instructor, Lieut. Barnard, whose much needed inspiration and untiring efforts have yielded a well-knit regiment. It is with deep regret that I say farewell to the Cadet Corps, an organization whose benefits cannot be over-estimated by me.

SERVICE LIFE AS A CAREER

By LIEUT. JUSTIN F. BARNARD
Military Instructor, Roosevelt High School

FORTUNATE indeed is the man who can make his avocation also his vocation. Earning our living by doing the things we really want to do is an ideal that is worth achieving. One of our most honored professions at this time is that of army life, especially as a commissioned officer. Under the preparedness program now in progress, increasing stress and importance will be given this old and honored calling.

LIEUT. JUSTIN F. BARNARD
Military Instructor,
Roosevelt High School

For young men who are confronted with the problem of selecting a vocation in life after high school and college, what better proving ground could be provided than the opportunity granted by the Washington High School Cadet Corps? The long list of alumni of our schools now in the armed services of the United States speaks eloquently for the success of such a trial period in convincing Washington boys who like and will enjoy service life. Every graduating class from our service academies contains several names of men who have started their service careers in our schools. The rapid promotion of our graduates who have been inducted under the Selective Service Act is evident.

Our Corps, from the Professor of Military Science and Tactics down to the newest February recruit, has every reason to be proud of the worthwhileness of its efforts. Continued striving for perfection will become habit. This will result in additional achievement and satisfaction in all lines, but prominently so in helping us select our field of service so that we will be contented, at the same time that we are contributing our share toward carrying on the burdens and duties required by citizenship in our beloved Democracy.

THREE years ago, when I first entered the Cadets at Roosevelt High School, there was quite a number of rookies. Some officers were instructed to form us in a single line according to height. Although I was standing near the tall end at the time, I was moved with startling and humiliating rapidity to the shorter end. Thus I entered the Second Battalion, which it has been my pleasure to command during the past year.

Remembering the confusion of our first few drills in February, when to lift that Springfield rifle seemed almost a Herculean task, I am amazed that by March we were able to perform rifle manual with the ease of veterans. I recall how quickly the drill was over; I did not realize then the hours of practice and consultation which are necessary for a smooth coordination of the companies and the staff.

It is this coordination which makes cadets such valuable training. For a cadet is a part of a group, a "machine," as the time-honored metaphor. He learns, in the course of three years, to adjust himself to all positions—private, non-com, and commissioned officer. In all these roles, the cadet must work with others, as a superior or as an inferior. The process of reaching the top in the cadet corps is a beneficial one, in which irregularities of personality are smoothed out.

For their assistance, I wish to thank my faithful right-hand men, Lieut. Hunton Leith, Battalion Adjutant, and Lieut. Hal Lowry, who has capably filled the post of Supply Officer left vacant last February by the graduation of Lieut. Donald Frazier. Company I has been ably trained by Captain Claude Dickerson and his officers, Lieuts. Bob Finlay and Pete Turner. Captain John Wolfe's work with Company K has been exceptionally conscientious, as has that of his aides, Lieuts. Paul Willhide and Morton Goode. Lastly, my thanks go to Mr. Barnard and the rest of the Military Committee, whose praise has been cheerfully given.

THE CADETS CARRY ON

By MR. JOHN F. BROUGH

Acting Principal, Calvin Coolidge High School

Through the years, amid the stress of international and domestic crises and the other distractions of changing times, the Washington High School Cadets have gone their way. Steadfastly they have made their contribution to the life of their schools and to the community. At all times the Corps has marched forward unwavering.

With the opening of new schools new cadet units have been established. Each has immediately taken its place as an integral part of the larger organization. Each new company seems imbued with the traditional spirit and morale of the Corps, cherishing the high ideals to which so many generations of cadets have given their allegiance. No outgoing class of cadets has been content with past achievement but rather has sought to plant its banners well ahead of previous goals.

To many, even though they may not be conscious of it, the Corps passing in review becomes the living embodiment of the eternal spirit of youth. This spirit renews the life of each generation and in the light of its own vision makes its place in our civilization.

No pessimist who views the future of our society with misgivings can be associated with the Corps and remain a pessimist. He will know then that the young men of today are as able as any who have gone before, that they have high standards, that they can and do accept responsibility, that they perform capably and resourcefully the tasks which they find to do—that the future of our nation is safe in their hands.

TRAINING IN THE CADET CORPS

By MAJOR THOMAS J. HOLMES

Principal of Calvin Coolidge High School

IN TIMES such as these we are now passing through, we are more likely to give serious consideration to life and preparation for life than we ordinarily would under normal conditions. The High School Cadet Corps has always had as its principal objective the teaching of good citizenship. The responsibility of good citizenship is more evident and more necessary today than at any other time in the history of our country.

A good citizen must be self-disciplined. He must be able to work with and for others; he must have a clear understanding of the democratic principles upon which our social system is organized; and he must have training which will enable him to follow as well as to lead.

The Cadet Corps trains in all of these. A boy enters as a private and accepts the discipline imposed by his officers and non-commissioned officers, thereby learning the principles of self-discipline and the ability to hold himself in check. He works with the other boys in his squad, his platoon, his company, and realizes that he has a definite part and is an important cog in the work of his organization. He learns the democratic principle that the good of the individual is important but that it must be interpreted in terms of the good of the whole group.

Until he has become an officer, he has been a follower, and as such has learned that intelligent obedience to established and properly selected authority is necessary. As he becomes an officer, he realizes that the responsibility of leadership is now upon his shoulders, and he must bear in mind that the good of the group and his followers now rests in his hands.

The Coolidge High School in this its first year salutes the Cadet Corps, and pledges itself to carry forward the traditions which have been set by so many who have worn the uniform.

CALVIN COOLIDGE HIGH SCHOOL SEPARATE BATTALION

CALVIN COOLIDGE HIGH SCHOOL

By MAJOR ROBERT MILLAR, H. S. C.

WHEN, last November, I received my commission from Roosevelt High School as Major, detailed as commander of the Coolidge Battalion, which had just been organized as a unit of the High School Cadet Corps, I immediately set as my goal, and I know the officers set as theirs, the placing of the battalion near the top in the annual Battalion Competitive Drill.

That was six months ago. During the past six months we have been faced by many difficulties, among these, the problem of transporting the fourteen commissioned officers from Roosevelt to Calvin Coolidge each drill day, the problem of securing rifles and fitting out the gun room, that of devising an efficient filing and grading system, and many others. Mr. Warren, our faculty military adviser, and Mr. Lee G. Gilbert, chairman of the military committee, undertook the solution of these various problems; and a well-knit, highly organized battalion is the result of their efforts. As an example of the efficiency with which the organization of the battalion was handled, Mr. Warren devised a system of photographing each man in the battalion, and furthermore, of learning each man by name. On behalf of the officers and men of the battalion, I take this opportunity to extend my appreciation to Mr. Warren, and Mr. Gilbert, and to Mr. Holmes, our principal at that time, whose aid and interest in the battalion have been invaluable and who, through his personal efforts, secured new sabers for our use.

In its infancy the Coolidge Battalion is fortunate to have as its company commanders such efficient officers as Captain Jetton, Company A; Captain Bateman, Company B, and Captain Watkins, Company C. These three officers, aided by their lieutenants and non-commissioned officers, have developed three companies which I know will make showings in the Company Competitive Drill of which we can be proud. I wish to express my thanks to these three captains for their loyalty, their determined and successful efforts; and also to Captain Hubbard of our band, who has built up a very promising organization.

To my lieutenants, Staffin, Selis and MacFall, Battalion Adjutant, Supply Officer, and Personnel Adjutant respectively, are due my most sincere thanks. They have offered invaluable aid to the efficient and orderly functioning of the battalion as have also my staff sergeants, Sgt. Major Cruickshanks, Supply Sgt. Wallace, Tech. Sgt. Murphy, and Color Sgts. Schweitzer and Cohn.

Without the loyalty and support of the men our efforts would have been futile, for the officers could have accomplished nothing had they not had the unselfish devotion of their non-commissioned officers and men of the ranks. The fact that Calvin Coolidge won the trophy offered by the Washington Chapter, University of Virginia Alumni Association to the high school having the highest percentage of enrollment in the High School Cadet Corps testifies to the whole-hearted manner in which the boys entered into the spirit of the organization. I never saw better spirit and morale, devotion and determination than that which is possessed by the men of our battalion, and so, for their excellent cooperation I express my appreciation. To these men, many of whom, together with the non-commissioned officers, will make up next year's set of officers, I wish the best of luck. Under these men, as officers, with whose ability and loyalty I am well acquainted, the battalion I feel is assured success in the future.

HAND SALUTE!

By MR. RYLAND M. WARREN

MR. RYLAND M. WARREN
Military Instructor,
Calvin Coolidge High School

A HAND salute and congratulations are due before the present detached Battalion of Calvin Coolidge High School Cadets is dismissed for 1941. The Commissioned Officers from Roosevelt High School deserve special citation for the enthusiasm, effort, and patience with which they have worked to train the three companies under their command.

The organization of a new Battalion in a new school, with cadets from several former schools, presented situations which only very fortunate circumstances could have so successfully adjusted. The first, to mention, was the good fortune of having as Principal, Mr. Thomas J. Holmes, now a Major in the Infantry, Army of the U. S.; secondly, in having Mr. Lee E. Gilbert as chairman of the Military Committee, whose experience, personality, and whole-hearted devotion to cadet work made it possible to create, early, a complete and accurate system of performing the details of operation; thirdly, the student-body responded with interest and enthusiasm to such an extent that the percentage of boys enlisted was highest of the Washington high schools. We are proud to have won the Trophy offered by the University of Virginia, for the first time, for having the highest percentage of boys enrolled.

The response for service as guides in connection with National Registration for Selective Military Service is to be highly commended and is one of many indications that the cadets of Calvin Coolidge High School will grow into an Eighth Regiment that will soon be known as winners of "First Place" in many cadet competitions.

CHRISTMAS TREE LIGHTING

By SGT. MAJOR BENJAMIN CRUICKSHANKS, H. S. C.

ON Christmas Eve Colonel Rhodes and the highest ranking Cadet officer from each of the eight high schools acted as a Guard of Honor for President Franklin D. Roosevelt at the annual lighting of the National Community Christmas Tree. The tree was located on the Ellipse, just south of the White House.

When the President's car approached and the Secret Service men deployed, the officers came to "attention." "Present saber" was executed as the President stepped from his car and held while he proceeded up the ramp to the speaker's platform. At this time the officers were dismissed, but most of them stayed to hear the President's speech. In his opening remarks the President said that next year he hoped to have the Community Christmas Tree in the White House grounds.

This was indeed an opportunity for the officers chosen to see the President of the United States light the beautiful tree, and a privilege to represent the Washington High School Cadets at this occasion.
